

<https://soundcloud.com/learnteachlead/nora-clip>

People often don't identify math anxiety as something that they should, you know, do something about. We can't all be writers and famous authors but I think there would be a shame in saying you were illiterate and if you were, you would do something about it. So you know, we can't all be a math genius but we certainly can all add, subtract, multiply and divide and if we can't, we should be upset about that. And sort of, if that were more common in society, I think people would think differently.